Well, if this isn't a match made in heaven. A cookbook laid out in a way that totally matches how I think about getting food on the table day to day. My usual line of thought is this: "What do I have in the fridge? Hmmmm | lessee |. uh yeah, that XXXXX looks good. Now, what can I do with it?" • OR I'll be at the supermarket, see they have a "deal" on something I like (chicken thighs? salmon fillet? apples?) so I'll pick some up without having a concrete plan for what to do with it. Enter "Dinner Made Simple." Here you have 35 common ingredients listed in alphabetical order. For each ingredient, you get 10 different recipes. Not the same recipe with 10 variations; no, you get 10 DIFFERENT recipes. And they're easy to prepare, using mostly pantry items you already have. AND they're good! My usual practice when reviewing a cookbook is to prepare 3 recipes to check for flavor, accuracy, and ease. Here are my three:1) I had skin-on bone-in chicken thighs in the freezer from a supermarket special a couple of weeks ago, so I started with what I had on hand. • Chicken Thighs • is one of the 35 listed ingredients; 3 of the recipes were for bone-in chicken thighs; the other 7 were for skinless/boneless. I chose • Teriyaki Chicken with Bok Choy • because I just happened to have 2 bunches of baby bok choy from a CSA delivery the day before. Five ingredients, including bottled teriyaki sauce (I have a good one I like to use in stir fry, so I just used that). This one is super easy in terms of prep: marinate the chicken for 30 minutes in some of the teriyaki sauce + garlic, then roast in oven basting with additional sauce. Add bok choy in last 10 minutes. Serve over rice. Can't get much easier than that. It was good, not • OMG THIS IS FANTASTIC!!
