I'm 30 minutes and 5 "movies" into this training CD, and so far, the author (Mr. Butow) has told me nothing about how to do anything useful with the RoboHelp product. He has rambled on monotonously about the history of the product, talking over a blank screen. There has been no visual action so far (half an hour into the video). It's a lot like listening to the radio (even though it's supposed to be visual instruction). And during this time, I have been told me about the long corporate history of Bluesky software (which created the RoboHelp application) and was later acquired by Macromedia, and then again by Adobe System. And I have learned about all the various word-processing editors that have ever been associated with the product, but I still haven't learned anything about how to use the product (i.e. start a new topic, create a new project, etc.) Oh, another downside of this video instruction is that you have to install both QuickTime and another proprietary video software player on your computer before you can even access the lessons. (This took another 20 minutes to figure out, due to the poor documentation that came with the product.) I was hopeful that this video tutorial would help me learn this application quickly/painlessly relative to reading a book. But what can I say? This is a big disappointment... If I were you, I would not buy this RoboHelp instruction. I would search for a similar web-based or video-based product, or I would turn to a "RoboHelp for Dummies" book. Don't waste your money on this garbage.
